William, just seeing your response, but not your original ask. I was in Japan last week (not at state expense). Just FYI, in 9 years we have never had a press conference here for anyone. Our building is hard to find and we don't really have a good location. What most groups do is to set up across the street on the sidewalk to get our building in the shot. You can also do the event at designated "public square" locations like the Rotunda or South Wing. That is always my preference location because the media knows the space and you get a free mic.

I am at the bench right now so I cannot break away.

As always, good to hear from you.
